VANCOUVER COMMUNITY COLLEGE FIRST IN CANADA TO INSTALL NEW LANGUAGE LAB TECHNOLOGY

Vancouver Community College has just installed Canada's first tapeless language lab, at its King Edward Campus.

The new lab is manufactured by the Sony Corporation, an industry leader in advanced language lab technology. There are only six other similar facilities currently in operation in the United States, one located at Gilroy, California.

The Sony ZL 10 system uses digital voice memory instead of the traditional audio tape cassettes, and offers students and instructors many advantages over current labs.

Digital audio technology means a recording signal is converted directly into computer data, instead of being transferred onto magnetic tape. That way, sounds, words, and even sentences can be rapidly retrieved, repeated or re-arranged, without awkwardly shuttling a tape machine back and forth. The technical quality of the voice reproduction is also very high with this new system.

The new technology allows a student to listen to any part of a lesson at random, and make digital recordings in response. Two different lessons can be simultaneously placed in a master memory, which operates four times faster than traditional language labs.

This ability to rapidly review and re-arrange material gives teachers and students a lot of flexibility during lessons. At the same time, the lab has all the usual features, including instructor monitoring, intercom, all call, pairing, etc.

Vancouver Community College technical staff needed to replace their aging language lab at the King Edward Campus when they learned about the new digital technology being developed by Sony. After a fact-finding trip to California to see the ZL 10 in action they were convinced.

"This new system represents a significant improvement in language lab technology", says Bruce MacLean, Director of Instructional Media Services for the college. "We're really pleased to be able to offer our students such quality in learning opportunities."

MacLean also hopes VCC can share its experience with the new lab among the other educational institutions. The lab will be on display at the upcoming convention of the Association for Media and Technology in Education in Canada, to be held June 19-21 in Edmonton. MacLean will be on hand to discuss VCC's experience with the new lab.
