THE NATIONAL GENEROSITY TEST

TODAY YOU CAN DONATE YOUR HARD-EARNED money and valuable time to nearly 100 charitable organizations across Canada — from the Red Cross to the United Way.

IMAGINE But imagine this: If each of us gave a minimum of just 1% of our income, or volunteered just one day a month, and help more of us in more ways, Canada's good causes would be able to do much more for us in more ways.

The first step is to know the facts — they could surprise you. The next step is to measure your own generosity. Because when it comes to giving, our good intentions don't always match our actions.

An industry of The 100's (more for Philanthropy)

1 Philanthropy is a disease that afflicts all Canadians.

- False. Philanthropy means promoting human welfare through donations of time or money. Unfortunately, while more than two-thirds of us think we're pretty generous, only one in three Canadians volunteer their time to causes that concern them, and they only average half a day a month.

2 Giving can be good for your health.

- True. A recent study found that regular volunteers work dramatically increased life expectancy. So if you want to live longer, get plenty of rest and exercise, eat your grains — and be generous with your time and money!

3 Canadians are more generous than Americans.

- False. Individual Americans are three times more generous than Canadians, and companies in the United States donate four times the percentage of pre-tax profit that Canadian companies give. The good news is that Canadians are prepared to be more generous.

4 You're giving much less than your parents did.

- True. Individual Canadians are giving about 3/4 of 1% of their income to charities — 30% less than they gave twenty years ago. And remember inflation: giving the same each year means giving less each year. So please plan your giving — and plan to raise it each year.

5 Individual Canadians give much more than Canadian companies.

- True. Individual Canadians give about 10 times the amount given by Canadian companies. And corporations today are giving a considerably lower percentage of their income than they did a decade or two ago.

6 If you won the lottery, you'd give part of your winnings to charity.

- False. Very few Canadians, when asked how they'd spend their lottery millions, mention donating any part of their windfall to charity. On the other hand, 60% of Canadians said they'd like to see giving double. So the next time you win the big one, remember to give as good as you got.

7 The typical volunteer is a middle-aged woman.

- False. Canada's millions of volunteers are split almost equally between men and women. The vast majority of them are employed and most of them are just as busy as you are. So if you can't seem to find the time to volunteer just think of all your friends and associates who can. Then imagine the difference you can make!

8 It would take a mammoth effort to change things.

- Very very false. If every Canadian volunteered just one day a month, that would mean 180 million additional days volunteered — you really can make a difference. And if our giving averaged just 1% of our income, $1.3 billion in new money would flow into the non-profit community — in the first year alone. Imagine!

Now, Look in the Mirror.

And ask yourself:

1. When was the last time I gave time or money to a charitable cause?
2. How much — or how often — did I give in the past year?
3. What percentage of my income did this amount to?
4. Does my company or employer donate to charitable causes?
5. Am I a busy person? Has being busy kept others from volunteering their time?
6. How is my health? Maybe I could improve it by helping others.
7. Am I looking for opportunities in my community to get behind causes I believe in?

IMAGINE the difference I can make.
